

I would not like to see New Jersey's do not call weakened. My household used to receive calls on the hour everyday from early morning until late at night. If we picked up the phone the person answering was rude. If told you weren't interested they hung up in your ear. Then called again the next day every day. One in particular still calls everyday asking for someone named Mrs. Martinez.

I never buy over the phone and do not intend to buy over the phone.

Therefore, calling me constitutes harrassment. Having that volume of calls upsets your personal well-being. I continue to need protection. At this point they continue to call at least twice a day but don't say anything if you pick up the phone. A caller Id does not trace the calls. But "unavailable" does give some warning that this is may be an unwanted call.
